1 Special issue: AI in engineering   ■
D. Sriram, R. Joobbani
April 1985 ACM SIGART Bulletin, Issue 92
Publisher: ACM Press
Full text available: 🅟 pdf(8.79 MB)   Additional Information: full citation, abstract

> The papers in this special issue were compiled from responses to the announcement in the July 1984 issue of the SIGART newsletter and notices posted over the ARPAnet. The interest being shown in this area is reflected in the sixty papers received from over six countries. About half the papers were received over the computer network.

2 Efficient use of workstations for passive monitoring of local area networks   ■

> Effective management of a local area network (LAN) requires not only a protocol to manage the active entities, but also a means to monitor the LAN channel. This is especially true in shared-channel LANs, such as Ethernet, where the behavior of the LAN as a whole may be impractical to deduce from the states of the individual hosts. Passive monitoring can be done using either a dedicated system or a general-purpose system. Dedicated monitors have been favored for several reasons, but recent w ...

3 Link and channel measurement: A simple mechanism for capturing and replaying   ■

> Physical layer wireless network emulation has the potential to be a powerful experimental tool. An important challenge in physical emulation, and traditional simulation, is to accurately model the wireless channel. In this paper we examine the possibility of using on-card signal strength measurements to capture wireless channel traces. A key advantage of this approach is the simplicity and ubiquity with which these measurements can be obtained since virtually all wireless devices provide the req ...

4 A survey of customizability in operating systems research

G. Denys, F. Piessens, F. Matthijs
December 2002 ACM Computing Surveys (CSUR), Volume 34 Issue 4
Publisher: ACM Press

An important goal of an operating system is to make computing and communication resources available in a fair and efficient way to the applications that will run on top of it. To achieve this result, the operating system implements a number of policies for allocating resources to, and sharing resources among applications, and it implements safety mechanisms to guard against misbehaving applications. However, for most of these allocation and sharing tasks, no single optimal policy exists. Differe ...

5 A comparison of system monitoring methods, passive network monitoring and kernel instrumentation

A. W. Moore, A. J. McGregor, J. W. Breen
January 1996 ACM SIGOPS Operating Systems Review, Volume 30 Issue 1
Publisher: ACM Press
Full text available: pdf(1.89 MB)   Additional Information: full citation, abstract, index terms

This paper presents the comparison of two methods of system monitoring, passive network monitoring and kernel instrumentation. The comparison is made on the basis of passive network monitoring being used as a replacement for kernel instrumentation in some situations. Despite the fact that the passive network monitoring technique is shown to perform poorly as a direct replacement for kernel instrumentation, this paper indicates the areas where passive network monitoring could be used to the great ...

7 Special session on software systems #2: Case study: lessons learned during a nationwide computer system upgrade

Maureen Ann Raley, Letha Hughes Etzkorn
April 2004 Proceedings of the 42nd annual Southeast regional conference
Publisher: ACM Press
Full text available: pdf(312.78 KB)   Additional Information: full citation, abstract, references, index terms

This paper is a case study that presents the results of a lessons-learned questionnaire gathered during the final six months of a nationwide computer system upgrade. The method used to capture the lessons learned feedback is presented. Common complaints and obstacles encountered during the system upgrade are summarized and possible improvements are suggested. The case study indicated that, although the project was completed on time, a more rigorous solicitation of feedback on management directio ...

8 A versatile development process for small to large projects using IBM CMVC

Seong R. Yu

October 1994 Proceedings of the 1994 conference of the Centre for Advanced Studies on Collaborative research

Publisher: IBM Press

This paper discusses how IBM* Configuration Management Version Control (CMVC) can be applied to an Incremental Development Model, and it shows how CMVC can be configured to match different project sizes and different stages in the software development life cycle. Applying too much process during a stage in the software development lifecycle can cause unnecessary work, and too little process can cause lose of control. Applying the correct amount of process will help to achieve target quality and ...

Network processors (NPs) promise a flexible, programmable packet processing infrastructure for network systems. To make full use of the capabilities of network processors, it is imperative to provide the ability to dynamically adapt to changing traffic patterns and to provide run-time support in the form of a network processor operating system. The differences to existing operating systems and the main challenges lie in the multiprocessor nature of NPs, their on-chip resources constraints, and t ...

An expert system known as the Automated Project Design System (APDS™) has been developed to assist process and facilities engineers in performing preliminary feasibility studies, optimization studies, and provide the basic information required for the initiation of the detailed design for offshore oil and gas production facilities. Given the feedstock and product specifications, the expert system produces a preliminary process flow diagram showing all major pieces of equipm ...

In addition to the intellectual effort, information security lab development can require substantial organizational budget and labor commitments. For example, obtaining commercial security software necessitates a significant budget commitment. In an analogous manner, installing security software, setting up user accounts, and configuring lab systems can require a significant labor commitment. In many academic environments, obtaining the necessary budget and labor commitments for effective 'Hands ...

In 2002, we first brought High Performance Computing (HPC) methods to the college classroom as a way to enrich Computational Science education. Through the years, we have continued to facilitate college faculty in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) disciplines to stay current with HPC methodologies. We have accomplished this by designing and delivering faculty workshops, hosted in a variety of lab settings, as well as by developing tools supporting the technical infrastruct ...

Computer hardware evolves very quickly. To benefit from cheaper and more powerful systems, big applications have to be ported to new environments. The Ada language has been designed for portability, making such migrations easier. However, today's applications often complement their main implementation language by various extra technologies: shell scripts, direct usage of OS primitives, different programming languages to access some libraries e.g. for graphical user interfaces, etc. These technol ...

15 Precision synchronization of computer network clocks

David L. Mills

April 1994 ACM SIGCOMM Computer Communication Review, Volume 24 Issue 2

Publisher: ACM Press

Full text available: pdf(1.53 MB)   Additional Information: full citation, abstract, citings, index terms

This paper builds on previous work involving the Network Time Protocol, which is used to synchronize computer clocks in the Internet. It describes a series of incremental improvements in system hardware and software which result in significantly better accuracy and stability, especially in primary time servers directly synchronized to radio or satellite time services. These improvements include novel interfacing techniques and operating system features. The goal in this effort is to improve the ...

December 1985 ACM Computing Surveys (CSUR), Volume 17 Issue 4

Publisher: ACM Press

Full text available: pdf(5.49 MB)   Additional Information: full citation, abstract, references, citings, index terms, review

Distributed operating systems have many aspects in common with centralized ones, but they also differ in certain ways. This paper is intended as an introduction to distributed operating systems, and especially to current university research about them. After a discussion of what constitutes a distributed operating system and how it is distinguished from a computer network, various key design issues are discussed. Then several examples of current research projects are examined in some detail ...

18 A TCP tuning daemon

Many high performance distributed applications require high network throughput but are able to achieve only a small fraction of the available bandwidth. A common cause of this problem is improperly tuned network settings. Tuning techniques, such as setting the correct TCP buffers and using parallel streams, are well known in the networking community, but outside the networking community they are infrequently applied. In this paper, we describe a tuning daemon that uses TCP instrumentation data f ...

19 The impact of Ada and object-oriented design in NASA Goddard's Flight Dynamics Division

Sharon Waligora, John Bailey, Mike Stark

May 1997 ACM SIGAda Ada Letters, Volume XVII Issue 3

Full text available: pdf(1.68 MB)   Additional Information: full citation, abstract, index terms

This paper presents the highlights and key findings of 10 years of use and study of Ada and object-oriented design in NASA Goddard's Flight Dynamics Division (FDD). In 1985, the Software Engineering Laboratory (SEL) began investigating how the Ada language might apply to FDD software development projects. Although they began cautiously using Ada on only a few pilot projects, they expected that, if the Ada pilots showed promising results, the FDD would fully transition its entire development orga ...

20 Manufacturing applications: Simulation in automotive industries: using empirical evidence of variations in worker performance to extend the capabilities of discrete event simulations in manufacturing

Tim Baines, Linda Hadfield, Steve Mason, John Ladbrook

December 2003 Proceedings of the 35th conference on Winter simulation: driving innovation

Publisher: Winter Simulation Conference

Discrete Event Simulation of manufacturing systems has become widely accepted as an important tool to aid the design of such systems. Often, however, it is applied by practitioners in a manner which largely ignores an important element of industry; namely, the workforce. Workers are usually represented as simple resources, often with deterministic performance values. This approach ignores the potentially large effect that human performance variation can have on a system. A long-term data coll ...

21 Design tradeoffs for software-managed TLBs
Richard Uhlig, David Nagle, Tim Stanley, Trevor Mudge, Stuart Sechrest, Richard Brown
August 1994 ACM Transactions on Computer Systems (TOCS), Volume 12 Issue 3
Publisher: ACM Press

An increasing number of architectures provide virtual memory support through software-managed TLBs. However, software management can impose considerable penalties that are highly dependent on the operating system's structure and its use of virtual memory. This work explores software-managed TLB design tradeoffs and their interaction with a range of monolithic and microkernel operating systems. Through hardware monitoring and simulation, we explore TLB performance for benchmarks running on a ...

One problem in computer program testing arises when errors are found and corrected after a portion of the tests have run properly. How can it be shown that a fix to one area of the code does not adversely affect the execution of another area? What is needed is a quantitative method for assuring that new program modifications do not introduce new errors into the code. This model considers the retest philosophy that every program instruction that could possibly be reached and tested from the ...

This article addresses the performance of distributed database systems. Specifically, we present an algorithm for dynamic replication of an object in distributed systems. The algorithm is adaptive in the sence that it changes the replication scheme of the object i.e., the set of processors at which the object inreplicated) as changes occur in the read-write patern of the object (i.e., the number of reads and writes issued by each processor). The algorithm continuously moves the replication ...

The Network Time Protocol (NTP) is widely deployed in the Internet to synchronize computer clocks to each other and to international standards via telephone modem, radio and satellite. The protocols and algorithms have evolved over more than a decade to produce the present NTP Version 3 specification and implementations. Most of the estimated deployment of 100,000 NTP servers and clients enjoy synchronization to within a few tens of milliseconds in the Internet of today.This pape ...

In this paper, we detail our development of Explorebots--expandable, vision- and sensor-equipped wireless robots built around MICA motes. We developed Explorebots as a dynamic outreach for an NSF-funded Girl Scouts project. We've extended the capabilities of Explorebots to comprise a mobile network experimentation testbed. The testbed will support experimental analysis of protocols for mobile multi-hop networks. The low-cost Explorebots enable repeatable experiments without complete relia ...

Computer-supported cooperative work (CSCW) is a new multi-disciplinary field with roots in many disciplines. Due to the area's youth and diversity, few specialized books or journals are available, and articles are scattered amongst diverse journals, proceedings and technical reports. Building a CSCW reference library is particularly demanding, for it is difficult for the new researcher to discover relevant documents. To aid this task, this article compiles, lists and annotates some of the curren ...

This paper describes a Web-services-based system which we have developed to enable organizations to semi-automatically preserve their digital collections by dynamically discovering and invoking the most appropriate preservation service, as it is required. By periodically comparing preservation metadata for digital objects in a collection with a software version registry, potential object obsolescence can be detected and a notification message sent to the relevant agent. By making preservation so ...

It will be studied which degree parallel supercomputers can be scaled to. Necessary measures to achieve a maximum scalability will be discussed, and a case-study be presented. To this purpose, a new class of "supermassively parallel architectures" is introduced, and the notation of scalable architectures will be extended to reflect the impact of technological progress onto cost-functions. For systems in this class, the performance efficiency of applications is discussed and two ...

A multidatabase system (MDBS) is a confederation of preexisting distributed, heterogeneous, and autonomous database systems. There has been a recent proliferation of research suggesting the application of object-oriented techniques to facilitate the complex task of designing and implementing MDBSs. Although this approach seems promising, the lack of a general framework impedes any further development. The goal of this paper is to provide a concrete analysis and categorization of the various ...

For the effective use of a laboratory for teaching parallel processing, it is desirable to have parallel systems that can implement various parallel structures at hardware or software level. Such systems developed in our laboratories are described in this paper. They are a multi-computer with reconfiguration and the PVM (Parallel Virtual Machine) with structural implementation. The paper proposes a methodology and several classes of problems for teaching message-passing programming on paral ...
